What I believe in is so magnificent, so glorious, it's beyond fin to make sense. To believe that the universe was created by a single-minded, benign Creator is one thing. To believe that this Creator has taken on human betrayal, accepted death and mortality, was seduced, betrayed, broken, and all for the sake of love for us, defies reason. It is so wild that it scares some Christians who are trying to dogmatize their fear by attacking other Christians, because neat Christianity with all the answers is easier than the one that reaches for the wild miracle of God's love, a love we don't even have to earn. Page 2 of Earth will never be the same again Rock, water, wood, iron, share this greif As distant stars are involved in pain. Candle snuffed, falling star or leaf, dolphin death, O this particular loss of heaven-be mourned; for if no angel had cried, if this little one had been thrown out like a slag, the galaxies would have lied. How are we going to sing our love song now in this strange country where everyone is born to die? Every tree, leaf and star show how the universe is part of this one cry, every life is celebrated and cherished, and nothing a loved one is ever lost or perished. Page 3 I think that all artists, regardless of the degree of talent, are a painful, paradoxical combination of certainty and uncertainty, arrogance and humility, constantly in need of reassurance, and yet with a stubborn streak of belief in their own reality no matter what. Circle of Silence (Crosswicks Journals, Book 1). Book by Madeleine L'Engle, 1971. Page 4 When we look at a painting, or hear a symphony, or read a book, and feel more named, for us this work is a work of Christian art. But to look at a work of art and then judge whether it is art, and whether it is a Christian, is presumptuous. This is something we cannot know in any convincing way. We can only know if it speaks in our own hearts, and leads us to a deeper life with Christ in God. In Tara at this fateful hour, I shine all the heavens with his power, and the sun with its brightness, and the snow with its whiteness, And fire with all the force he huts, and lightning with his rapid wrath, And the winds with their swiftness along their path, And the sea with its depth, And the cliffs with their twisting, And the earth with its rigour: All this is the place I Almighty God's help and grace between me and the forces of darkness! Page 5 If I have something I want to say that it is too hard for adults to swallow, then I write this in a children's book. Children have not yet closed themselves from fear of the unknown, fear of revolution or struggle for security. They are still familiar with the innate vocabulary of the Madeleine L'Engle myth (2017). Crosswicks Journals: The Circle of Silence, Summer of Great-Grandmothers, Irrational Season, and Two-Part Invention, p.123, Open Road Media Page 6 Assuming, takes practice. When we or painting, or or we, in times of creativity, are liberated from normal limitations, and are open to a wider world where colors are brighter, sounds clearer, and people are more wonderfully complex than we usually understand. Page 7 But there is something about time. The sun rises and sets. Stars slowly sway across the sky and disappear. Clouds are filled with rain and snow, emptied and filled again. The moon is born, dies and revives. Around millions of hours swing clock hands, and minute hands, and second hands. There is a continuous circle of scale notes going on around. Around goes the circle of day and night, the circle of weeks, forever rotating, and months, and years. Yes! I dare to break the universe. Page 8 And Joy is always a promise. What can we give to a child when there is nothing left? All we have, I think, is truth, truth, that will free him, not a limited, provable truth, but an open, growing, evolving truth that is not afraid. Page 9 seemed to travel with her, sweeping her in the air in the power of the song, so that she moves into glory among the stars, and for a moment she too felt that the words Darkness and Light made no sense, and only this melody was real. Madeleine L'Engle (2013). Wrinkle in Time Trilogy, page 100, Macmillan Page 10 I love, so I'm vulnerable. Nothing important is entirely understandable. Page 11 My husband is my most ruthless critic... sometimes he will say: It was said better before. Of course I do. It's all been said better before. If I thought I should say it better than anyone else, I would never have started. Better or worse doesn't matter. The fact is that it has to be said; Me; Ontologically. Each of us should say it, say it in our own way. Not by her own will, but as it comes out through us. Good or bad, great or small: it's not what human creation is about. put it in pigment, or words, or musical notation, or we die. In reading, we must become creators. I saw Eternity that night as a great ring of pure and infinite light, all calm as it was bright, And round beneath it, Time, in hours, days, years, driven by spheres, How a huge shadow moved, in which the world and its entire train were thrown. Page 12 Wild Nights is my glory! The images disappeared, but Calvin was there, was with her, was part of it. It went beyond knowing it in sensory images in a place that is beyond the images. Now she was kything Calvin, not red hair, or freckles, or wanting blue eyes, or a glowing smile; and she did not hear a deep voice with a rare triple cracking; not all of it, but - Calvin. She was with Calvin, king with every atom of her being, giving him all the resilience and stamina and hope he gave her. If I didn't fall in love, I could be happy all the time. Art is communication. Page 13 Love is one surprise. A book comes in and says, Write to me. I never have an age in my dreams. Page 14 To be to be vulnerable. Be Be that rigidity is put in jail. It was a dark and stormy night. You will learn to write by doing it. The degree of talent, the size of the gift does not matter. All artists should listen, but not all hear great symphonies, see wide canvases, understand complex, character-filled novels. No matter the creative act is the same and it is an act of faith. Page 15's Splash of Harmony is so brilliant that it's almost overwhelmed by them surrounded by Meg, The Cherubs, Calvin, and Mr. Jenkins. But after a moment of shortness of breath, Meg was able to open up to the song of the spotlight, these strange creatures that were deepened, rooted, but never separated from each other, no matter how great the distance. We are the song of the universe. We sing with an angelic master. We're musicians. Farah and the stars are singers. Our song orders the rhythm of creation. Page 16 It wasn't the end, it was the beginning of Page 17 Page 18 You have to write a book that wants to be written. And if the book is too complicated for adults, you will write it for children. - Madeleine L'Engle Book can also be a star, a living fire, to ease the darkness leading into the expanding universe. - Madeleine L'Engle I am not something static, bound in a beautiful parcel and passed to the child, finished and finished. I always get. - Madeleine L'Engle, Circle of the Silent When We Were Children, we used to think that when we were adults, we would no longer be vulnerable. But growing up is about accepting vulnerability... To be alive, to be vulnerable. - Madeleine L'Engle life, with her rules, her obligations and freedoms like a sonnet: You got the form, but you have to write a sonnet yourself. - Mrs. Whatsit - Madeleine L'Engle, wrinkle in time If we commit to one person for life, it is not, as many people think, the rejection of freedom; rather, it requires the courage to go into all the risks of freedom, and the risk of love that is permanent; into this love, which is not possession, but participation. - Madeleine L'Engle Some things should be seen as seen. - Madeleine L'Engle No long-term marriages are done easily, and there were times when I was so angry or so hurt that I thought my love would never recover. And then, in the midst of almost despair, something happened beneath the surface. The bright little blinking fish of hope flicked the silver fins, and the water is bright, and suddenly I returned to a state of love - until the next time. I learned that there will always be next time, and that I will be immersed in darkness and suffering, but that I will not stay underwater. And every time something is recognizable underwater; Something has been received; and a new kind of love has grown. The best I can ask for is that this love, which was built on countless failures, will continue to grow. I can say no more than that that it is a mystery, and a gift, and that somehow, through grace, our failures may be and blessed. - Madeleine L'Engle Just because we do not understand does not mean that the explanation does not exist. Because I used to be a kid, I'm always a kid. Because I once was searching for teenagers, given the mood and ecstasy, they are still a part of me and always will be... This does not mean that I should be trapped or imprisoned in any of these ages... delays of teenagers, childish adult, but what they are in me to be drawn on; forget this form of suicide... Too many people misunderstand what it means to mention children's things and think that to forget what it's like to think and feel, touch, smell and walk to taste, see and hear how a three-year-old or a 13-year-old or twenty-three-year-old means being an adult. When I'm with these people, I, like the kids, feel that if that's what it means to be an adult, then I never want to be one. Madeleine L'Engle I will have nothing to do with God who cares only occasionally. I need a God who is with us always, everywhere, in the deepest depths, and at the highest altitudes. This is when something goes wrong, when good things don't happen, when our prayers seem to have been lost, that God is most present. We don't need sheltered wings when everything goes smoothly. We are closest to God in the darkness, stumbling blindly. - Madeleine L'Engle We are all strangers in a foreign country, homesick, but not quite knowing what and where the house. We see it sometimes in our dreams, or as we turn a corner, and suddenly there is a strange, sweet acquaintance that disappears almost as soon as it comes. - Madeleine L'Engle Our true answer to the irrationality of the world is to draw or sing or write, because only in such an answer we find the truth. - Madeleine L'Engle Don't try to understand with your mind. Your minds are very limited. Use your intuition. - Madeleine L'Engle, The Wind in the Doorway of History makes us more alive, more joyful, more courageous, more loving. - Madeleine L'Engle Hate hurts the hater more'n hated. - Madeleine L'Engle Love music, sunsets and sea; sympathy for the same kind of people; political views that are not radically divergent; a similar position as we look at the stars and think of the miraculous strangeness of the universe - that's what build marriage. And this should never be taken for granted. - Madeleine L'Engle, Two Part Invention: The History of Marriage We Must Be Bolder Than We Think We Can Be, Because God Constantly Urges Us to Be More Than We Are. even his freedom to make the wrong choice is to manipulate him as if he were a puppet, not a man. - Madeleine L'Engle In Tara at this fateful hour, I put all the sky with its power, And the sun with its brightness, And snow with its whiteness, And fire with all the force he hut, and lightning with its rapid anger . And the winds with their speed along their path, And the sea with its depth, And the rocks with their twisting, And the earth with its severity A: All these I place, Almighty god's help and grace The confluence of myself and the forces of darkness! to carry his glory. If we are qualified, we tend to think that we have done the job ourselves. If we are forced to accept our apparent lack of qualifications, then there is no danger that we will confuse God's work with our own, or the glory of God with our own. 32 33 next » » madeleine l'engle quotes. madeleine l'engle quotes about god. madeleine l'engle quotes marriage. madeleine l'engle quotes love. madeleine l'engle quotes walking on water. madeleine l'engle quotes a wrinkle in time. madeleine l'engle quotes light. madeleine l'engle quotes christ
